THE RAT CATCHER.

HIS PROFESSION CONNECTED WITH POLITICAL ECONOMY.

Rats Form One of the Criminal Classes, and Ought to Be Hunted Down as Such—Work Done on Contract—Dogs and Ferrets.

"They aren't taken into consideration by the census, they don't pay taxes and they aren't mentioned in the city directory, but they are a big population." As the man said this he threw his net over his shoulder, settled his box on his back, and called his dog.

"Rats! Yes, rats. That's what I'm talking of. Generally speaking, I'm the rat man. Not that rats are particularly fond of me, for they ain't; but my business tends in that line. I live on rats. What? No, I don't eat the varmints! Do I look like a Celestial? I live on rats, and the rats live on the city. In other words, I'm a rat detective. For that matter, I'm somewhat of a scientist, too; I study the habits of these little critters."

"That is, you are a professional rat catcher?" suggested the reporter.

"Well, yes; to put it in that way. I'm the rat man. With these dogs and these ferrets, with the help of the net to keep them from getting away, I endeavor to clear the city of that part of the population which is least considered by political economists. They form one of the criminal classes, and as criminals I hunt them. They are a consuming class, doing their part to dispose of the overproduction; as such I study their habits. They are a producing class, too, to the extent of giving employment to me and these little critters, and as such I have the highest regard for rats.
If the government knew their importance congress would probably create a department of rats; but they should at all events have a bureau of rats in the department of agriculture. Maybe you never thought of it, but the rat is an indirect tax which may go far toward reducing the surplus, and should be taken into consideration in the revision of the tariff. I am getting up some statistics on rats, which I may make public some day, to the confusion of political economists and the general well being of mankind."

"Now, if you want your house cleared, here's your chance. I'll make contract to clean every rat hole out in four hours for $10.
That is, if the house is not too big. My rate is $10 a day and upward."

"How do you propose to do it?" asked the reporter.

DOGS AND FERRETS.

"You see these ferrets? I have thirty or more of them—no, not all here. I have three dogs; you see 'em—and these nets and myself.
That's what it takes to clean a city of rats.
That and the money to pay me." As he spoke he shook the net over his arm and pointed to the dogs, which stood by his side all chained together. "That's a rabbit beagle, that's half and half, and the other a Skye terrier. They know each other—these dogs and the ferrets.
They never interfere with each other. The ferrets go into the holes to drive the rats out, and the dogs kill the varmints as they come out. We killed seventeen rats in two hours the other day, and not long ago we killed thirty-eight in four hours. Mice! No-o-o! We don't meddle with mice. They're great big rats. Genuine big ones."

"Where do you work?" asked the reporter, settling himself down to encourage the philosophical rat catcher to further conversation.
"Everywhere," was the sweeping reply.
"We don't stay in one place very long. You see," he added with a wink, "the rats get scarce after we have been in a place for a while. We go from town to town and city to city, staying just long enough to kill all the rats—or at least all the people will pay for. We work in private houses, livery stables, theatres, churches, wharves and hotels and mills, particularly mills—flour mills. I cleared the National theater not long ago, and lost a ferret by it, too. The little critter went through into the next house and the cook cut its head off and skinned it."

The rat catcher stopped here to explain his opinion of cooks in general and this cook in particular, and then continued: "I make contracts with hotels, feed stores and such like big establishments. In fact, I do most of my work by contract. Sometimes I get the worst of it. I made one contract to clear a house, and as fast as I killed them more came. I thought I would never get to the end of them. Finally I lost one of my ferrets and when I found him he was in a house at the other end of the square. They had been driving the rats down from every house in the block, and I'd been doing it all for one job."

A PROFITABLE PROFESSION.

"Do you find it a profitable profession?" was asked.

"Barrin' the cooks that kill the ferrets and the imposition of the pesky rats having the run of a whole block, it pays pretty well.
It's $10 a day, and sometimes all I can do.
The ferrets are worth $15 a pair when they are worth anything, and when they're like these—well trained—they can't be had for less than $25. I can't afford to have bloodthirsty cooks skin 'em."

"Do the rats ever kill the ferrets?" asked the reporter.

"No; they can't do it. They run to break their necks when they smell one of the little critters. If the rat shows fight at all the ferret goes zipp and the rat's done for; his head's gone and his blood sucked. Rats will do funny things to get away," he continued.
"One day a drove ran out of a cellar we were hunting and we couldn't find them until we dug them out of a sand pile, where they had hid—seventeen of 'em. You see the dogs tell us where they are; then we spread the nets to prevent them running too far, and put the ferrets in on them. Then there is a scamper.
When many come out at one time it is lively for a while."

"I've had to do with rats for a long time now," he continued, "and have got to know them pretty well. They're an interesting family, from the miller's rat with powdered hair, who sits like a judge on a meal sack, to the piratical wharf rat, famous for his rak-ishness and his immense size, or the slimy sewer rat that lives on the refuse of the city.
This last fellow is the only one I could ever see might be of some service. He may work for his board as a scavenger. At all events, he don't eat anything that anybody else wants. The church mouse is rated as the most starved out varmint in the world, but I never could see what a theatre rat got to eat.

Big, long, lank fellows walk about the stage at night, like Hamlet's ghost—or whoever he was—and I don't see what they live on, unless it is the music. They say rats like music."—Washington Star.

ONE OF THE TRICKS.

An Armless Man's Appeal to the Sympathy of His Fellow Man.

While a group of men in front of Leggett's hotel bar were discussing the attempt upon Editor O'Brien's life at Toronto on Saturday in and asked for "a little old rye, please." Quickly the glass, decanter, and a napkin were produced, but the stranger did not move. For several seconds silence almost painful ensued. Then the customer raised his eyes and said: "Excuse me, sir, but, as you see, I am armless. Will you kindly pour out my drink?"

"Certainly," rejoined the urbane bartender, grasping the decanter. "Tell me when to stop."

Half a glass of fluid fire trickled out and the stranger cried "Halt!" Then, bending forward, he seized the rim of the glass with his teeth, threw his head backward, and swallowed the dram without a grimace. With another apology he asked the bartender to wipe his mouth with the napkin. He did so, and was about departing without paying when a bystander inquired, "Where did you lose your arms, sir, may I ask? Gettysburg?"

"No, sir; I was too young to fight for my country."

"Perhaps a circular saw, powder explosion, or—"

"No, no," broke in the stranger, "none of those things."

"Well, how was it, pray?"

"To be candid, sir, I must confess that I am not a hero, and have figured in no frightful accident. I never had any arms. I was born without them, and I live upon the charity of others. I am forced to do it, simply because I cannot work," and tears seemed to glisten in the cripple's eyes. "Of course, gentlemen, if you can spare any small change, please drop it in my side pocket and you will have my gratitude."

Instantly the souls of the listeners were fired with generosity, and they went down into their pockets. Several quarters, half dollars and three dimes found their way into the maimed man's pocket, and he bowed himself away and out the door. Down Park row he hurried. At Chambers street he turned toward Broadway. A few doors further on he met an acquaintance, who saluted him with,
"What luck, Dan?"

"Bully, old boy! Step into this hallway." In they dashed. There, after conversing for a moment in an undertone, Dan's coat and vest were removed by his companion, and a pair of stout, robust arms were exposed to view. Dan had taken his hands from inside the waistband of his trousers. He resumed his raiment, the money was counted out and divided and the men reappeared on the street.
As they passed the observing reporter Dan said: "Now, Ike, it's your turn to do the act."—New York Sun.

An Eye to Business.

A fruit vendor from Italy stood beside his handcart sorting bananas into small piles, surmounted with placards indicating the price. He determined the value of each banana as he handled it. Suddenly he paused and felt of one more carefully than the others.
He squeezed it slightly at each end.
Holding it out at arm's length in his open palm, he cocked his head, shut one eye and critically examined it. As though not entirely satisfied, he raised it to his chin and ran it across his face close to his nose. Apparently satisfied, he laid the banana upon the pile labeled one cent and renewed his sorting.
Suddenly he stopped as though his arm had become paralyzed. He cast a pained look at his one cent pile. Then he picked up the fruit so carefully examined, and, after another careful scrutiny, deposited it upon the two cent pile. A few minutes afterward he repeated the scrutiny, and placed the perplexed banana once more upon the one cent pile.

At that moment a district messenger boy, with a cap twice too large for him, sauntered to the cart and ran his eye over the fruit. The Italian watched him closely. The boy threw a cent upon the wagon and picked up the banana which had caused him so much perplexity. The Italian looked as though earth had lost for him its every charm. For ten seconds he stood looking at the urchin, who buried his teeth into the luscious fruit.
Then he turned like a flash and transferred three bananas from the one cent pile to the two cent pile. A new customer was at his elbow. A smile as mild as his native skies spread over the Italian's face as he said: "Banana! Sell-a-ver! chep-a Good-a banana!"

Run Out by Paper Bags.

"The days of the market baskets are numbered," said a basket dealer to a reporter.
"The paper bag is running it out for good.
There used to be a time when every family had a market basket, which was carried out whenever supplies were to be purchased.
When a man goes to market now he doesn't take a basket along. At the first stall where he makes a purchase the marketman asks, 'Large bag or small bag?'

"If the man is on a regular marketing tour he says, 'Large bag.' The dealer puts the purchase in a handsome manilla bag three or four feet long, which will hold as much as any ordinary market basket. The bag is made of exceptionally strong paper, and will hold the weight of anything you can put into it, including a half a peck of potatoes.
When the last purchase has been deposited in it the buyer asks the dealer to tie it up. This is quickly done, and in such a manner that a nice cord handle is furnished, and no one would ever guess that the bag contains marketing. It looks more like a bundle of dry goods. Every Saturday evening you can see men going home on the cars with these nice bundles which would never dream of carrying market baskets."—New York Sun.

THE SUICIDAL MANIA.

STATISTICS FROM A PHYSICIAN WHO HAS STUDIED THE SUBJECT.

Chicago Leads All the Other Large American Cities in the Ratio of Suicides to Population—Interesting Facts Concerning Self Murder

A Chicago medical man who has made quite a study of suicide, and who has collected a large and most interesting mass of statistics and speculation on the subject, says that Chicago leads all large American cities in ratio of suicides to inhabitants. In Chicago, during 1886, there were 110 cases of self murder, or 1 in 6,350 of the population.
Next to this in this country is New York, where 1 in 8,000 sought rest from trouble in physical annihilation. In Boston the ratio was 1 in 9,000, in Philadelphia 1 in 12,500, in Baltimore 1 in 10,000 and in Brooklyn 1 in 18,000. The large number of suicides in Chicago, Dr. DeWolf thinks, and in this agreement with the other medical man quoted, is due to the preponderance of the foreign population here, many of whom find themselves penniless and friendless in a strange country.
Homesickness is no doubt responsible for the mania which leads numbers of immigrants to take the fatal step. In foreign cities, says the student of suicides, self destruction is much more rare than in America. In Berlin, Vienna, Brussels, Munich and Copenhagen the ratio is twice as high as in Chicago, while in Hamburg 1 person in 2,300 destroys himself. This is an appalling record. London makes a good showing, only 1 in 10,700; while in Glasgow and Edinburgh suicides are rare indeed—1 in 42,000 in the former city and 1 in 33,000 in the latter.

RATIO OF SUICIDES.

It is probable that the ratio of suicides is higher in Chicago than in any other community in this country. While in this city one in 6,350 makes way with himself, in the whole United States the ratio is but one in 30,000. There can be no doubt that the gambling and speculative craze so rife in Chicago has as much to do with this as the preponderance of foreign population.

Americans are not much given to suicide.
The average Yankee appears to prefer working himself to death or dying of dyspepsia.
Only Spain, Russia and Scotland show fewer cases of self destruction than the United States. The number of suicides each year per 1,000 inhabitants has been computed with tolerable accuracy, as follows:

Spain14	Scandinavia81
Russia25	Austria96
United States33	Germany143
Italy37	France156
England56	Switzerland302
Belgium71	Denmark266

"It is worthy of note," continued the suicide statistician, "that in the last official report of 1,600 cases of suicide in the United States in a single year, 179 are given as occurring in Illinois, while in New York state, with nearly double the population, there were but 166. How to account for this I do not know. There are some peculiar facts about this mania which I do not recollect having anywhere seen intelligently summarized. The largest number of suicides occurs between the ages of 45 and 50. I suppose that just as the prime of life is passed one's troubles begin to appear darker and darker to him, and the will power and moral stamina grow correspondingly weaker. August, that dreadful hot month, is the leading suicidal month, both in this country and Europe, which may be easily accounted for. In hot weather the weak and sick and melancholic are at the lowest ebb, physically and spiritually, refreshing sleep is not easily had, and the result is an epidemic of self destruction. In Europe the smallest number of suicides occurs in December, while the minimum is reached in America in January or February."

MOST FRUITFUL CAUSE.

"The most fruitful cause of suicide? Insanity. This, however, is in many cases an unsatisfactory definition. It is the fashion to attribute self destruction to temporary insanity or aberration, when other causes would be more appropriate. As a matter of fact nine out of ten cases would, with no grat stretch of the properties, be attributed to mental downfall. But taking the statistics as we find them we have about one-fourth of the total number of suicides, or 400 out of a total of 1,600, set down as the result of insanity. Next come family troubles, with half as many (212), and business troubles, with one-fourth as many (115), and love troubles rather more than business embar-assments, or 124. Under these four specific heads we find more than one-half the cases, or nearly 900 in all. Disipation is fifth, with 84; sickness sixth, with 63; destitution seventh, with 55; undergoing or threatened punishment eighth, with 50; grief ninth, with 41, and chagrin at parental discipline tenth, with 23.

"As I said before, however, not much reliance can be placed on this classification of causes. Often the true cause is not known, or is concealed by the deceased's relatives and friends. I venture the assertion, based upon careful study of the reports of suicides, newspaper and statistical, during the last ten years, that three-fourths of the suicides in this country are caused, directly or indirectly, by drink and gambling. Drink brings on physical ailments, destitution, grief, mortification, family trouble, love trouble, insanity, aberration, mental and moral weakness, and the whole catalogue of suicide causes.
Gambling is often the outgrowth of drink, as are other forms of dissipation sure to end in disgrace and sometimes in death by one's own hand. Religious morbidness is another fruitful cause of self destruction which does not show as conspicuously as it ought in the reports. I think that more than one-half of the persons who take their own lives are secretly morbid concerning the problem of a future life."—Chicago Herald.

ertures so that it opens against the spring of

THE MAIDS OF HONOR.

Duties and Privileges of Queen Victoria's Ladies in Waiting.

The maids of honor to the queen earn every penny of the £300 a year which is their stipend for filling a very difficult position. With the best of intentions and with the kindest heart in the world, the queen expects so much from herself in the way of physical toil, both for business and pleasure, that she may perhaps be excused for sometimes forgetting that the flesh, especially aristocratic flesh, is weak. The maids of honor are on duty for a month at a time, and at the end of the month they are generally fit subjects for a course of tonic treatment. While on duty they cannot call their souls their own. After breakfast, which they take in their own rooms, they have to hold themselves in instant readiness to obey the queen's summons, which comes the moment Sir Henry Pon-sonby quits her majesty's presence, with the big red morocco dispatch box, containing his day's work, under his arm.

After a brief "Good morning," the queen suggests a little reading, and the dutiful maid addresses herself to the pile of papers, wherein the proper passages for her majesty's hearing have already been marked by Sir Henry.
Through columns and columns of parliamentary debate, leading article and correspondence has the poor lady to intone her dismal way, often having to repeat passages, for the queen never leaves a subject till she has thoroughly mastered it, and is not at all sparing in her commands to "Just read that again, please." The maid of honor is so busy minding her steps and trying to modulate her voice that she has little chance of understanding a tithe of what she is reading, and yet the moment the reading is over she has to rush off and get ready for a drive with her royal mistress, during which she will be expected to make lucid remarks on the topics she has just read aloud.

After luncheon is the only real time the maids of honor have to themselves, and even that is spoiled to them by the uncertainty as to whether they will be wanted to walk or drive with the queen later in the afternoon. They must stay in their apartments, for if by chance they should be sent for and could not be found at the moment, their life for a day or two would not be a happy one, so that a stroll in the grounds on their own account is out of the question till after 4 o'clock, when, if the queen has departed on a drive without them, they know they are free till 6 at any rate. On the queen's return there is more reading aloud, this time of ponderous works on heavy philosophical subjects, or else the arranging of sketches, photographs, or it may be, the charity needlework is brought out till such time as her majesty goes to dress for her 9 o'clock dinner, where, to the relief of the maids of honor, she is not expected to be present. By this time she is not unfrequently faint for want of food, for when not at court she would naturally be finishing dinner at the hour when it is the queen's pleasure to commence it.—London Cor. Kansas City Journal.

Gen. Van Vliet's Experiences.

There came into the corridors of the Fifth Avenue hotel the other night a stout, well made gentleman of middle size, with the flush of health on his fat, chubby face, and a general look of good nature beaming from his eyes. His hair was white and plentiful, and his flowing beard dropped down over his breast. It was Gen. Stewart Van Vliet, of Washington, and he had run over to visit Gen. Sherman.

"I do not come to New York often now," said he, "for I am growing old and am not quite as spry as I was in 1836, when Gen.
Thomas, Gen. Sherman and myself entered West Point together. Paul O. Herbert, who was afterward governor of Louisiana, graduated at the head of our class. After I got away from the Point I was in the Seminole war, in Florida, and saw many a hand to hand fight in those days, when ambushes were plenty and the old style of war was in vogue. When we had finished up the redskins the Mexican war came along and I led the storming party that swept through the streets of Monterey in the midst of the showers of leaden missiles pouring from the windows and house-tops, and was afterward in command of a battery in the trenches of Vera Cruz. The last shots fired in that war were by company B of the Third artillery, that I commanded. Coming back home I saw service on the plains, built Forts Laramie and Kearney, was with Gen. Sidney Johnston's Mormon expedition and was sent as a commissioner to Brigham Young. I was young and vigorous yet when the war of the rebellion broke out, and became chief quartermaster to the army of the Potomac, serving till the last shot was fired, and during my army life never had a day's leave of absence.
Don't you think I had fairly earned my retirement? And when it came to me six years ago I just settled down to grow young again and enjoy all there is of beauty and happiness in this life."—New York Graphic.

The Ballet in Paris.

There are 115 women and girls in the ballet corps of the Paris Grand Opera house. Ten are stars, ten are first subjects, twenty-two second subjects; there are three divisions of coryphees or leaders divided into four sections; the "walkers" and the infant class.
The pupils receive forty cents each time they appear, the young ladies of the quadrilles from $30 to $40 a month, the coryphees from $50 to $60, the subjects, or those who dance steps outside the ensemble figures, $60 to $300, and the stars from $5,000 to $9,000 per year.
In former times stars were paid higher salaries. For example: Taglioni received $7,300 a year; Fannie Elliser, $8,000; Carlotta Grisi, $8,400; La Cerito, $9,000, and La Roseta, $12,000. The organization of the grand opera ballet dates from 1713, and was decreed by Louis XIV, who wrote with his own hand the regulations for the first ballet corps.

Convict Labor.

The Daily Republican hasn't much to say of late on the question of convict labor, and yet the platform adopted by the Republican State convention condemns "the Democratic party of Kentucky for bringing convict labor into competition with that of honest workmen." Our contemporary was wont to rave and rant on this question a good deal, but it has grown strangely silent of late, and rarely hints at the matter. The discovery has been made by the blatant demagogues of the Republican party, who were harping loudest on the question, that the convict labor plank in their platform was "loaded," and was very liable to hurt some one if it was ever "touched off."

The Republicans are about as consistent on this question as they are on any other. Hon. John W. Feland, one of the oldest members of that party in the State, was the original inventor of convict labor in Kentucky. Mr. Feland was a member of the Legislature in 1880. The Democrats at that session had introduced a bill to establish a branch penitentiary. He opposed such a measure, and introduced as a substitute a bill to hire the surplus convicts, not exceeding six hundred, to work on the improvements of the navigable streams of this commonwealth, in rock or stone quarries, coal mines or iron works, or in the construction of railways within the State. This was the first proposition ever introduced in the Legislature to work convicts in coal mines, &c.—"to bring convict labor in competition with honest workmen" as the Republican platform has it, and it was introduced and urged by a Republican leader. This measure was defeated, and a similar bill intending to provide temporary relief, for the overcrowded penitentiary, was passed at that session, eleven Republicans voting for it, and only four against it, Mr. Feland being among those voting for it. A bill to provide for a branch penitentiary was afterwards passed, and this new penitentiary will soon be in condition to receive the convicts within its walls.

No wonder the Republicans have dropped this question. They are the originators of the system which they condemn the Democrats for introducing, the difference being simply that the Republicans wanted to make the system a lasting one, while the Democrats adopted it only as a temporary measure. Nice crowd of blatant demagogues these Republican leaders are, indeed! Condemn the Democrats, of course "for bringing convict labor in competition with that of honest workmen!" The workmen of Kentucky will hardly be caught by such silly clap-trap as the Republicans are throwing out to them.

Hon. John Feland, the originator of this convict labor system,—the system that brought such labor in competition with that of honest workmen—was nominated for attorney general at the Republican State convention in Louisville, in May. Last week he declined to make the race, and it is reasonable to infer that he was pulled off the track by his party.

The Republicans of Kentucky condemned convict labor in their platform, and then placed the originator of the system upon their ticket. Consistency, thou art indeed a jewel.

The Democratic convention to nominate a candidate for State Senator from Bracken, Pendleton and Grant counties will be held at Falmouth to-day.

THERE is good news from Nicholas County. The Democrats have gone to work, and intend rolling up a majority in August that will lay their past records in the shade. Not a single scratcher has been heard of so far.

At a recent primary election in Owen-ton, about fifty Democrats who have been "kicking" in past years pledged themselves to vote for Buckner, and the rest of the State ticket. Straws show which way the wind is blowing.

THERE have been forty-one murders in Christian County, Missouri, since the war, and thirteen in one township near St. Joseph, Mo., during the past six years. Kentucky may be a little bad in spots, but investigation will prove she's no worse than her sister States.

It looks very much like Cleveland will have a chance to knock Blaine out once more. He is the choice of the Democratic editors and politicians of the Northwest by a decided majority for President in 1888, while Blaine enjoys a like honor among the Republican editors and politicians of that section.

Of the one hundred and eighteen counties in the State only six were represented in the Union Labor convention at La Grange.

Hon. J. T. SIMON, Democratic candidate for State Senator from the Bracken, Pendleton and Grant district, was defeated in his home county in the primary last Saturday.

A vote will be taken in Bourbon County, August 6th, on a proposition to subscribe $250,000 to the Paris, Georgetown and Frankfort railroad. The statement that the charter of the road had been sold to the Louisville and Nashville company is denied.

JOHN FELAND, the ablest Republican in Kentucky, was the original inventor of convict labor in Kentucky, and General Drum, a Federal soldier and a Republican, was the first man to suggest that the Confederate flag be returned to the Southern States. Let us have peace.—Louisville Times.

The Union Labor party was knocked out in the Eighth ward of Covington the other day. This ward is one of the strongholds of that party, Thobe having carried it by a big majority last November over Carlisle. The fight the other day was hotly contested, but the Democrats won by a handsome majority.

The Prohibitionists, of Adams County, Ohio, have nominated the following ticket: "Representative, Rev. James McNeiland; Probate Judge, Allen Easter; Auditor, W. W. Higgins; Treasurer, Wm. Gustin; Sheriff, P. S. McCormick; Commissioner, E. G. Peterson; Infirmary Director, Clark Fleming."

EUGENE ZIMMERMAN, Leo Brigel, W. G. Stubbe, of Cincinnati, and Moses Sweetzer, a leading oil man of Parkersburg, W. Va., have leased 40,000 acres of oil and gas lands in Allen County, Ky., and Sumner County, Tenn. Mr. Sweetzer has been for twenty years an expert in developing oil fields, and he is confident the new syndicate have struck a rich oil region.

GOVERNOR KNOTT has informed the Lexington correspondent of the Louisville Commercial that he will send no soldiers to Rowan County upon the order of any official of that county. He says the officers themselves are lawbreakers, and that if he sends them at all they will simply go to keep the peace, and will not be subject to the order of any official of Rowan County.

The Union Labor party nominated the following State ticket: For Governor, A. H. Cardin, of Crittenden County; Lieutenant Governor, O. N. Bradburn, of Louisville; Attorney General John Newman, of Campbell County; Treasurer, George Smith, of Hancock County; Auditor, Mr. McMurray, of Lexington; Superintendent of Public Instruction, Mr. McBeth, of Marion County; Register of Land Office, Gano Henry, of Christian County.

THE Maysville Republican is great at "figgers"—almost equal to the good little school boy, who, after covering a thousand shingles with ciphering, solved the problem of the landing a frog would make, when, at the bottom of a sixty-foot well, it jumped one foot upwards every day and two feet backwards every night. The result, as found by the boy, was that the frog was within a quarter of a mile of h—l at the end of two weeks. If there are any slates left in Maysville it is to be hoped that the editor of the Republican will utilize them and cipher a few months, taking the statistics in General Buckner's speech as the basis for his examples.—Louisville Times.

The schools have closed, and the "figgerer" of the Daily Republican can borrow all the slates he may want.

THE election of William E. Chandler, from New Hampshire, completes the list of Senators for the Fiftieth Congress. "Of these thirty-nine are Republicans (if we count Mr. Riddleberger as such), and thirty-seven are Democrats. One Republican, Mr. Dawes, of Massachusetts, was elected by Democratic votes, receiving comparatively few from his own party. There will be but three States with Senatorial delegations politically divided—Ohio, California and Virginia. There are four other Democratic Senators from Northern States—the two from Indiana and New Jersey—making seven in all. Riddleberger is the only one from a Southern State voting with the Republicans. His term expires March 5, 1889."

Should Not be Forgotten.

"There is not enough attention being paid," says the Louisville Post, "to the very important constitutional vote which comes up at the August election. Several times during recent years the question of calling a Constitutional convention has been before the people, but each time the lack of interest in the question has prevented a successful vote. Under the bungling law at present, in vogue a call for a Constitutional convention has to be made by two-thirds of the legal voters, consequently every man who fails to vote on the question in reality casts his vote against it. Every candidate at the coming election should urge his friends to vote for the convention."

Over-Worked Women.

For "worn-out," "run-down," debilitated school teachers, milliners, seamstresses, housekeepers and over-worked women generally, Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription is the best of all restorative tonics. It is not a "cure-all," but admirably fulfills a singleness of purpose, being a most potent specific for all those chronic weaknesses and diseases peculiar to women. It is a powerful, general as well as uterine, tonic and nerve, and imparts vigor and strength to the whole system. It promptly cures weakness of the stomach, indigestion, bloating, weak back, nervous prostration, debility and sleeplessness, in either sex. Favorite Prescription is sold by druggists under our positive guarantee. See wrapper around bottle. Price $1 a bottle, or six bottles for $5.

A large treatise on Diseases of Women, profusely illustrated with colored plates and numerous wood cuts, sent for 10 cents in stamps. Address, World's Dispensary Medical Association, 683 Main street, Buffalo, N. Y.

Fidelity National Bank Closes Doors.

A special from the American Press Association, at noon, says the Fidelity National Bank, of Cincinnati, has not opened its doors to-day. Excitement runs high in financial circles. It is the largest bank in Ohio. It has been backing wheat speculators. The dispatch adds that it will doubtless re-organize and open soon.

A number of citizens of this city are among the stockholders of the Fidelity.

The Bank Examiner sent on by the Treasury Department ordered the Fidelity closed, and it will not be allowed to re-open except under a new organization, which would exclude from office Mr. E. L. Harper, Vice President and General Manager, Mr. Ammi Baldwin, Cashier, and Mr. B. E. Hopkins, Assistant Cashier.

THE Superior Court of Kentucky has adopted the following rules for the September term, 1887:

1. All cases except those continued to the September term for oral argument shall be set for the first week of the term. 2. Cases continued for oral argument shall be set on as many Wednesdays after the first week as may be required. 3. On the call of the docket during the first week cases in which an oral argument is demanded will be set for rehearing on Wednesdays not taken up by present continued cases, and such as come up to be thus set and heard will be continued. Cases ready for submission will then be submitted, and will be disposed of in the order of submission. Cases not then ready, and in which an oral argument is not desired, will be passed till the second Wednesday in October, when they will be called and submitted or continued.

WILLIAM G. JENKINS, for past two years with his uncle Judge J. A. Boulton, attending the University, left for his home at Maysville, Ky., accompanied by P. A. Boulton, a son of Judge Boulton. So says the Columbia, Mo., Statesman, which reminds the Paris Kentuckian-Citizen that it was Judge (then Professor) Boulton who in about 1847 met James G. Blaine in Maysville in hunt of a position as teacher in Kentucky. Professor Boulton said: "I have been offered a position in Military Institute at Georgetown which I am unable to accept, and for which I will recommend you." Blaine there met his fate in his wife, who took him to her home in Maine, from whence he arose.—Paris Kentuckian-Citizen.

A TRAVELER'S DESCRIPTION OF THE CASTLE OF CHAPULTEPEC.

"Men," said he, "as a rule, are not so close observers as women, and do not give what I call detective descriptions of persons. If you ask a man to describe a person he gives a general description that will suit a thousand or so, having the same color of hair and eyes. I remember trying to capture a woman once who was in league with some hiding counterfeiters. Several men described her in a general way and I watched carefully the train she was supposed to come into the city on every day. I found half a dozen on every train that could have answered the description. After a week of failure and chagrin I found a woman who had seen her and knew enough to give me a description. Her description had a strong detective point, only
